1. Title

Developing Japanese Junior High School Students' Communicative Competence through Focus-on-Form Instruction.

2. Teaching context

1) Level: 2nd year of a private junior high school, the lower-level class*

*22 students are divided into two classes based on their grades after every exam.

2) Class size: It varied.

April to May; 9 students (Female 4, Male 5)

May to July; 12 students (Female 5, Male 7)

September to October; 10 students (Female 3, Male 7)

October to December; 9 students (Female 2, Male 7)

January to March; 7 (Female 1, Male 6)

	Advanced Class	My class
Apr. - May	13	9

5) Problems:

I did not feel particular problems in conducting the class. The class members were friendly. Some were energetic, and some were helpful to one another.

However, I could not teach the same members throughout the year because the class members constantly changed based on their grades four times during a school year. Because of this, after each examination, the students who got relatively high marks went up to the advanced class, and only the lower-level students remained in my class*. This made my class members less influential to one another.

*For example, in April, nine students were in my class. After the mid-term exam in May, one student in my class went up to the advanced class, and four students came to mine from the advanced class. After the term-end exam in July, two students went up. After the mid-term exam, two students went up, and one student came down to my class. Finally, after the term-end exam in December, two more students went up to the advanced class from my class.

3. AR Goals

My goal is to make communicative language teaching happen with focus-on-form instructions in the classroom to develop learners' communicative competence and observe how students develop it and gauge the increase of their academic performance in the English language, which includes not only in-class performance tests such as a speaking test and a fun essay, but also the scores of exams at school, and the EIKEN Test to measure practical English proficiency. I set two measurable goals:

- (1) Students will be able to talk about a certain topic in pairs for 2 minutes relying on conversation strategies by the end of February.
- (2) Students will be able to write Fun essay about a certain topic with more than 50 words by the end of February.

4. Literature Review

1) Communicative language teaching (CLT)

Brown (2015) mentions that Communicative Language Teaching (CLT) is “what is the best described as a broadly based approach (not a method) to language teaching” (p.31). This approach develops learners' communicative competence, which by Canal & Swain (1980) proposed, and has four major components: 1) grammatical competence, 2) sociolinguistic competence; how to use a language appropriately, 3) discourse competence; an appropriate coherency, and 4) strategic competence; how to use communication strategies. In that CLT aims to develop communicative competence, grammar teaching matters in CLT though some language teachers have a misconception that CLT neglects grammar teaching.

Lee & VanPatten (2003) state that “Communicative language ability—the ability to express one's self and to understand others—develops as learners engage in communication and not as a result of habit formation with grammatical items”

(p.51). In CLT, “the instructor was no longer simply the drill leader but was also charged with providing students with opportunities for communication, that is, using the language to interpret and express real-life messages” (Lee & VanPatten, 2003, p.10).

2) Focus-on-form instruction (FFI)

While the grammar drill and practice were ineffective in promoting communicative language ability, the answer to this question, “How can we communicatively teach grammar?” is a focus-on-form instruction. It is an approach in which teachers have learners notice forms of grammatical items through comprehensible input activities and output activities. Raymond (2011) mentions that “FFI aims to naturally draw students’ attention to form as it arises in lessons” (p.28).

As the result of research on Second Language Acquisition over half a century, researchers have agreed that the traditional grammar teachings like the Grammar-Translation Method and Audio-Lingual methods, which emphasize drills and pattern practice, are ineffective (Sato, 2022, p.10). Ellis (2006) states, “A traditional approach to teaching grammar based on explicit explanations and drill-like practice is unlikely to result in acquisition of the implicit knowledge needed for fluent and accurate communication” (p. 102). Also, Lee & VanPatten (2003) indicate that insufficient and meaningless input in traditional grammar teachings does not enable learners to construct new grammar knowledge as their second language developing system. They also mention that “Research conducted since the late 1980s suggests that learners who are engaged in meaningful or meaning-based approaches to grammar (called focus on form) do as well as or better than those who are engaged in activities that are nonmeaningful or not part of some communicative intent” (p.123).

On the contrary, focus-on-form instruction is on the basis of the process of language acquisition theory, which means comprehensive and meaning-bearing input is followed by noticing and output. Therefore, learners can acquire a language effectively.

According to Lee & VanPatten (2003), the input should be “input that is manipulated in particular ways to push learners to become dependent on form and structure to get meaning and/or to privilege the form or structure in the input so that learners have a better chance of attending to it” (p.142). Such enriched input “induce noticing of the target form in the context of meaning-focused activity” (Ellis, 2001, p.20). Thus, learners can build a developing system for their second language.

Output is also significant. Lee & VanPatten (2003) states that “Although input is necessary for creating a system, input is not sufficient for developing the ability to use language in a communicative context” (p.168). They (as cited in Terrell, 1986, 1991) also say that “Just because a learner has incorporated a particular form or structure in the developing system does not mean that it can be accessed easily (and thus produced automatically)” (p.169). Therefore, output opportunities, where learners repeat accessing grammar items needed to communicate, are required to develop learners’ fluency and accuracy.

3) Conversation strategies (CSs)

Conversation strategies are concrete tactics for strategic competence. They are employed verbally and nonverbally “to accomplish a communicative goal, including compensation for breakdowns” (Brown, 2015, p.30).

According to Savignon’s “inverted pyramid” (2002, p.8), whether the learner’s communicative ability is high or low, they need strategic competence, which means that “in communicative activities, learners can learn to listen again and repeat what the other person has said, no matter what stage they are in their learning process” (Fujimoto, 2021, p.11). Conversation strategies are so beneficial that even lower-level students can use them as tools to start, continue, and close a conversation appropriately. Here are some typical conversation strategies.

- Opener: to begin a conversation. (Hi. / How are you? / How are you doing? etc.)
- Rejoinders: to show your interest in a conversation. (I see. / Sounds good., etc.)
- Shadowing: to confirm what a partner says.
- Fillers: to avoid silence during conversations and to consider what to say. (Well. / Let me see., etc.)
- Follow-up questions: to elicit extra information related to the topic they are talking about, or expand a conversation. (What else? / When? etc.)

- Closer: to close a conversation. (Nice talking with you. – You too.)

These simple phrases are helpful for learners to continue talking in English in a meaningful information exchange.

5. What I did

I mainly did three things in class throughout the year: a small talk activity, a focus-on-form instruction, and a writing activity, which I sometimes omitted due to time constraints. These were the pillars of my lesson. Then, I assigned the students Speaking tests and Fun essays for each term-ends.

In the first term, I introduced conversation strategies one at a time to my students, starting with an opener and a closer. It seemed that CSs made it easy for the students to begin the small talk activity because they learned what they say at the beginning of a conversation. Without conversation strategies, it would have been difficult for them to continue this activity.

Focus-on-form instruction includes three steps: input, noticing, and output. I struggled with each of them. I sometimes misunderstood the input activity. My input instruction was sometimes not comprehensible. It was just a question such as “Which baseball team is the richest? Which team has the most money?” My students may have understood what I meant, but this was not a comprehensible input.

Also, my noticing activity was not appropriate. I sometimes just gave a traditional explicit explanation to the students. I should have put the target sentence(s) with the sentence(s) that the students could compare with, and I should have had the students guess the meaning of the sentence(s) and notice the form.

In addition, I had trouble with the output step, too. I wanted the students to use the sentences that included the grammar item they learned and finish the task, but some students prioritized completing the task over using English. For example, they showed their worksheet to each other and got the information without making a conversation. In this way, I had several things to improve in the first term.

In the second and third terms, I kept reviewing and giving the students new conversation strategies such as rejoinders, shadowing, and follow-up questions. They were able to use them by using model dialogs I made. Conversation strategies and model dialogs were appropriate to improve their conversation in pairs.

In addition, I tried to make my focus-on-form instruction better. For example, I always used visual aids with AirDrop. Also, I sometimes used an output activity the students did before as a small talk activity at the beginning of the lesson so that the students could have more opportunities to recycle what they had learned.

6. What happened

I demonstrate how students have changed or not changed since April using the result of the surveys conducted in July, December, and February. I note here that the class members are different due to the class division. Thus, the valid response numbers vary in each survey. Because of this, I will show the results by using a percentage.

The questionnaire consists of three parts. Each is associated with my research questions, plus one open-end-question part. The three parts are about: I. Students' attitude toward learning English; II. Students' communicative competence; III. Students' awareness of the relations between the activities in class and their academic performance.

In addition to the survey, I interviewed six students in December and March. I put the result of the interviews at the end of this chapter.

[Survey result of Part I]

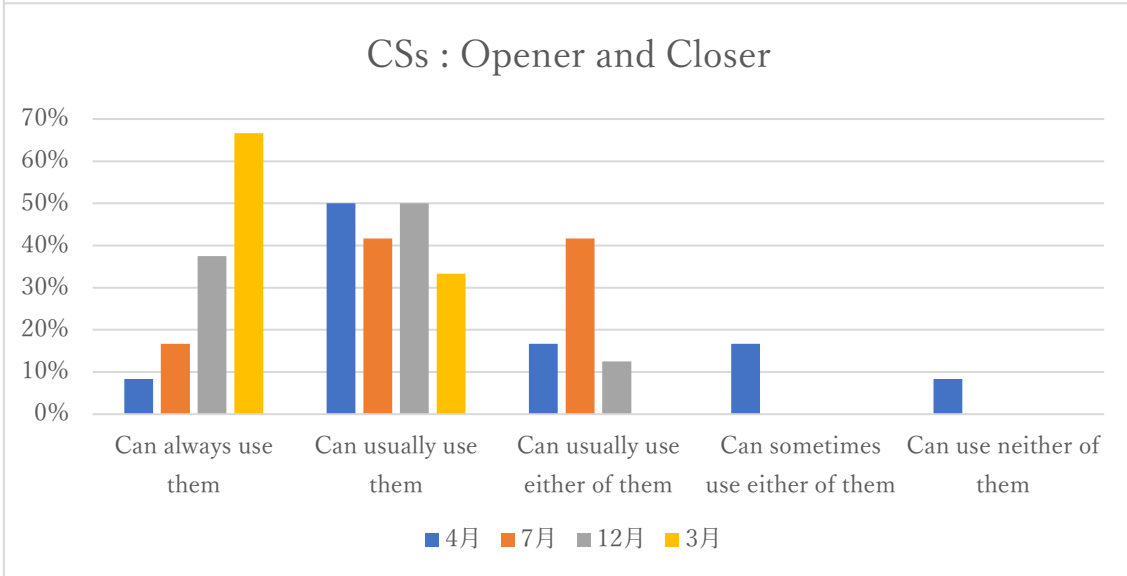

The first part regarding the students' attitude toward learning English has four questions: 1) Do you like English?; 2) Do you like Small Talk?; 3) Do you like Grammar Point Activities? (FFI); and 4) Do you like writing activities?

The survey shows the number of the students who have positive answers increased until December. However, in the third term, there is one student who have negative answers for the question a and c. Having students enjoy FFI may be the key to them getting interested in English.

[Survey result of Part II]

The second part regarding the students' communicative competence has several different types of seven questions, which includes how much the students understand teacher's English during the class, how long the students keep talking in the small talk activity, frequencies of each of communication strategies, and how much the students write in the writing activity. Since the students shuffles, it is difficult to find a salient tendency. However, most students got used to using conversation strategies, especially opener, closer and rejoinders.

Follow-up questions were introduced in January, so there is no data compared before. Only one student was able to use a follow-up question in the speaking test, and this student impressed me in the test because he made the conversation keep going using “how about you?” like below (the bold and underlined):

Ken : hi
 Shin : ah..えーつと what visit to go... go to play ...ん?
 Ken : I want to visit to Tokyo
 Shin : oh, that's nice ... is it exciting to go there?
 Ken : exciting...yes

Shin : [10 seconds silence]

Ken : how about you? what what visit what place visit do you want to go?

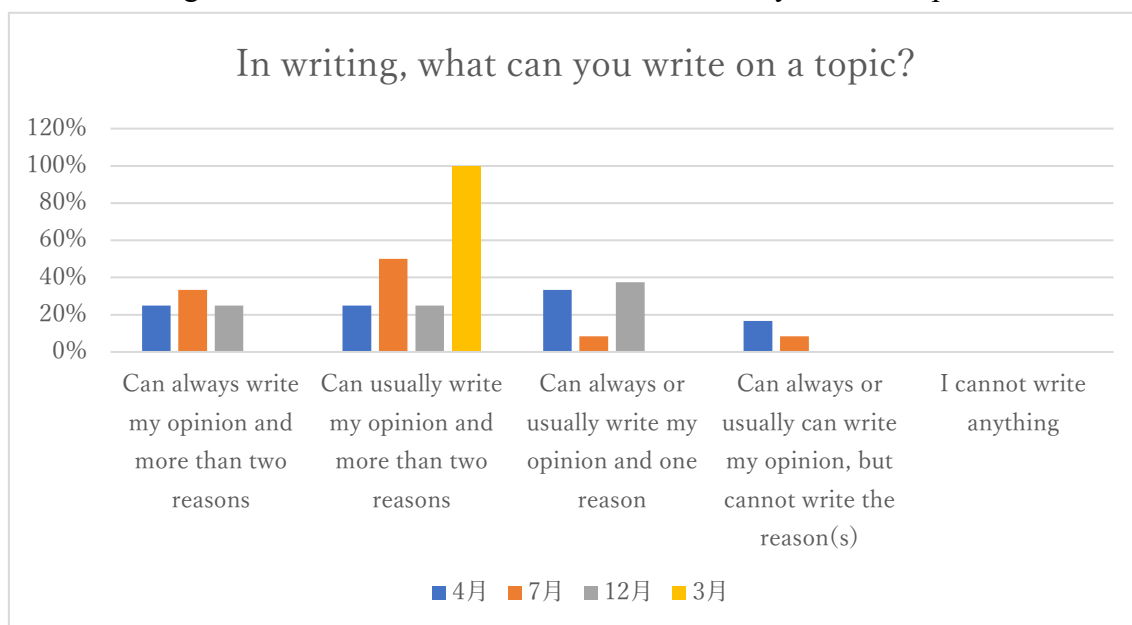

Shin : ah, what place do you want to go?

Ken : ちがうちがう、俺が聞いているの。

Shin : ahhh えーっと I want to visit えっと New York

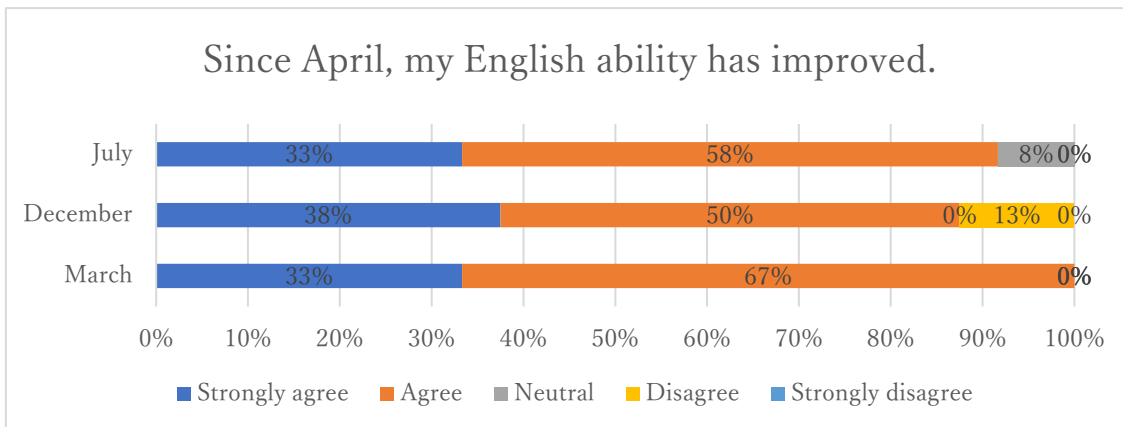

He realized that his partner could not continue the conversation, and started the new context by using “how about you?” This conversion was so natural.

In writing, more students can write more words than they could in April.

[Survey result of Part III]

The third part regarding the students' awareness of the relations between the activities in class and their academic performance. It is first asked if the English ability has improved since April. If the answer is positive like "strongly agree" or "agree", he or she answers the following 16 questions; if the answer is the rest, he or she answers the following different two questions.

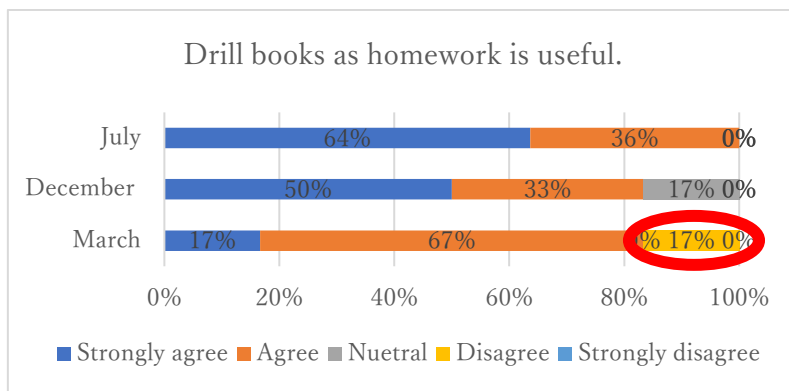

I am glad that all the students, who remain in the lower-level class throughout the year, indicated that their English ability improved.

- To improve my English ability

In terms of improving students' English ability, what I did in class is mostly useful to them. It is interesting that one student does not think it is useful to use the grammar drill book in class (see the red circle) in the first term. On the contrary, in the third term, one student hopes to do grammar drills in class (see the red circle). However, you can see most students agree that doing the grammar drill book at home is useful to improve their English ability.

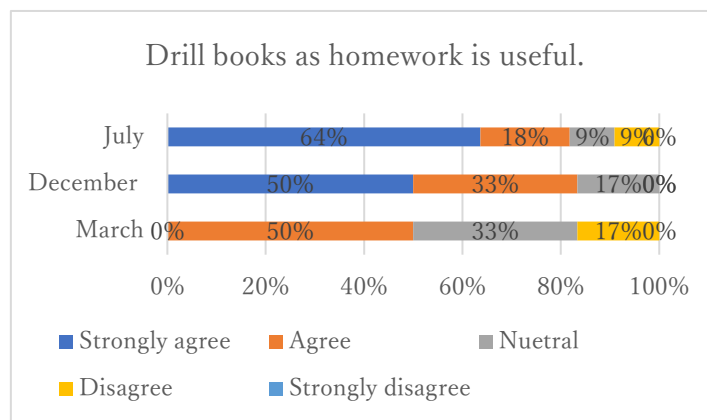

- To improve my English exam scores

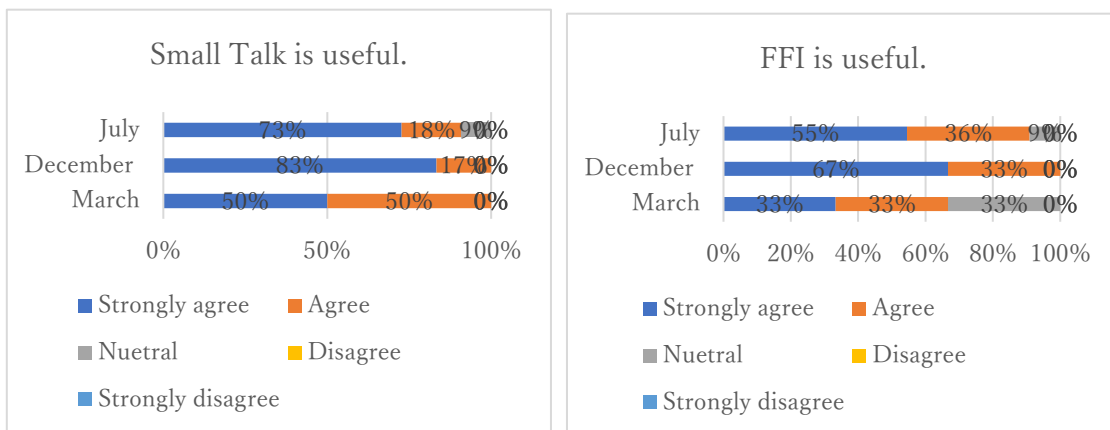

You can see an interesting tendency in terms of improving students' English exam score. In March, they think that in-class activities are relatively less useful than before. This may be because they learned that the activities for the performance tests in class will not be related to their grades. It is natural that they think it is useful to do the drill book to get high marks in the exam because the exam covers the drill textbook only.

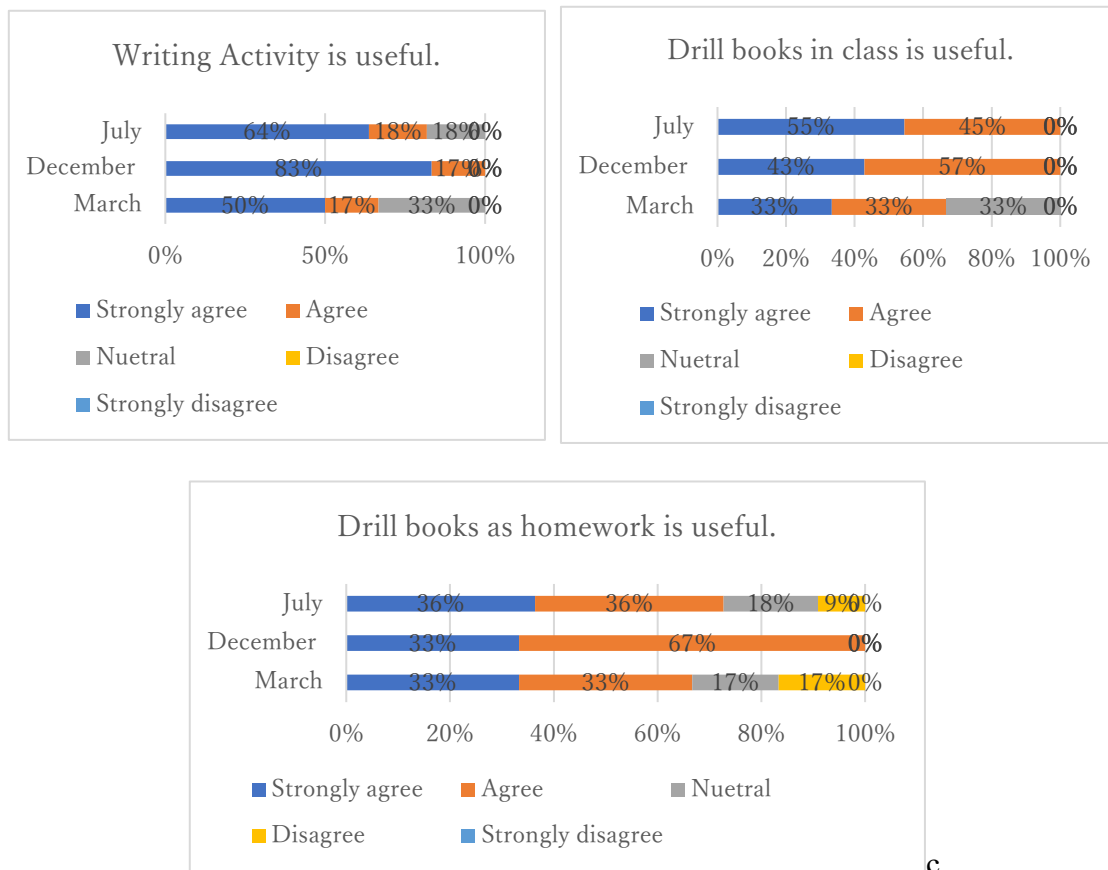

- To pass EIKEN

EIKEN requires the examinees to speak to pass the test. This is thought to be a simple reason why all the students think Small Talk is useful to pass EIKEN. In this respect, introducing speaking test to the school exam is reasonable to improve students' communicative competence. Also, some think doing drill textbook at home is not useful. Activities to use English in class must be helpful to such students.

The result of EIKEN for the students belonging to my class is below. I note that not only my lessons but also other teachers' lessons contributed to the results as a matter of course.

	Number of my class members	Result
July	12	6 passed EIKEN 3rd grade
November	9	1 passed EIKEN Pre 2 grade 2 passed EIKEN 3rd grade
February	7	1 passed EIKEN Pre 2 grade 2 passed EIKEN 3 rd grade

Last chart below indicates the activities they think were helpful to improve their English ability. Overall, what I did in class is helpful for them. It is a salient tendency that the students do not think that doing drill textbook relatively less effective to improve their English ability.

- The students' comments

Lastly, I introduce the students' comments on some open-end questions. First, I would like the students to compare themselves between in April and in March. They made comments about the attitude toward English, and their English skills. In addition, I let the students write any comments or requests about the class.

Most students made positive comments on their attitude toward English and skills. Some students mentioned in the last class that they want me to teach English next near too, because the other teacher only does drill textbook in class and that is boring. I put salient comments below. The number in brackets is the total number of students who had similar comments.

[About the attitude toward English]

Positive Comments

I did not have motivation for English learning, but now I like/enjoy learning English (16)

I memorized words, but now I pay attention to pronunciation. (1)

I just used words I knew, but now I look up new words and try to use them. (2)

Negative comments

I just memorized words and still do this.

[About English skills]

Positive Comments

I could not speak English, but now I can with conversation strategies. (4)

I could not write English well, but I can do it. (6)

Now, I can read faster than before and sometimes enjoy talking with people with ut hesitation although I am still not good at talking with or in front of people. (1)

Negative Comments

I couldn't understand English from listening, and still, I cannot.

[Comments or requests on the class]

I want to do more activities in class. (8)

I had a lot of fun. (7)

I want you to teach us English next year. (3)

Small Talk will be helpful to pass EIKEN. (1)

I want you to give me more grammar explanations. (1)

I want you to review the previous lesson at the beginning of the lesson. (1)

- The result of the interview

I interviewed six students. All six students answered “Small Talk is beneficial.” For example, “I can now read English better and more smoothly. (Ken in December),” “I learned a lot of expressions through model dialogs. This recursive practice makes my English better. (Saki in December),” and “I learned conversation strategies and have got used to conversation in English. Conversation strategies have made my conversation effective. (Takeshi in March).” It is interesting that three students remarked conversation strategies.

As for my focus-on-form instruction, all the students mentioned that activities are effective for them to learn grammar. “Activities enabled me to learn how to use the grammar items in a context (Ryo in March).”

These activities above were helpful to most students. They think so when they went to EIKEN interview tests.

“I could pass EIKEN 3rd grade because I learned several variations about conversation in English (Ryo in March)”

“The time when I found the activities in class most helpful was when I was able to answer the questions quickly at the EIKEN interview test (Ken in December).”

They felt what they did in class effective through performance test. If there were more performance tests in school, they could feel more fulfilled through the process of learning English at school.

7. What I learned

First, I have impressed that the conversation strategies are so effective. They are simple, but they have made the students' conversations effective. Whether they know the conversation strategies or not will make the difference.

Second, the students like communicative language learning. My relatively low-level students always proposed that we should play games (activities). They enjoyed using what they learned through output activities. My focus-on-form instruction needs to be improved, but the students' comments indicated in my survey have made me believe that I am on the right track.

Lastly, I hope that traditional tests based on grammar drill textbooks should be modified, and I want to see how the students will be changed or not changed when a performance test takes place. In my school, the students are evaluated only by paper-based tests, mainly based on the questions in the grammar drill textbook they used. My students tried hard on the performance tests like Speaking tests and Fun essays even though the results do not reflect in school grades. However, if the results of their performance had gone to the school grades, I believe they would have practiced harder and learned a language better.

8. Future issues

- Making my focus-on-form instruction stronger by creating an enriched input.
- Integrating the activities of focus-on-form instruction with the small talk activity.

I will put some grammar items in the topic-based small talk activity so that students can learn what they learned better.

Lesson Plan (Monthly AR report for February partially modified)

1) Level: 2nd year of a private junior high school, the lower-level class*

*22 students are divided into two classes based on their grades after every exam.

2) Class size: 7 students (Female 1, Male 6)

3) Time: 50 minutes × 3 / week

4) Textbook: Tettei Enshu Text English 2nd grade (Juken Kenkyu-sha)

「徹底演習テキスト 英語 2年」(受験研究社)

5) Objectives:

(1) Students will be able to talk about the country they want to visit in pairs for 2 minutes relying on conversation strategies by the end of February.

(2) Students will be able to write Fun essay about the country they want to visit with more than 50 words by the end of February.

6) Basic lesson procedure:

(1) Small Talk activity → related to Speaking test

(2) Writing activity (whose topic is the same as that of Small Talk) → related to Fun essay

(3) Focus on form instruction

7) Activity: “zero (bare) infinitive” (Day 8)

(1) Goal: To interview classmates using “zero (bare) infinitive” to make BINGO.

(2) Procedure of the activity (Focus-on-form instruction)

- Input

STEP1: Ss sort out the topics into four categories and share it.

STEP2: Ss listen to T and circle what they hear.

- Noticing

STEP3: Ss fill in the blanks of the explanations of a new grammar based on what they notice. T explains/summarize today’s Grammar Point, if necessary.

- Output

STEP4: Ss get ready to do BINGO. Ss practice the model dialog with T. Ss wrote their own answers in the worksheet and ask classmates questions for BINGO.

STEP5: Ss put Japanese into English and correct answers.

Handouts
